Art in Action is an exciting new program created to develop meaningful, multilayered, and long lasting partnerships with participating schools. Do you have the administrative and collegial support you would need to enter your school into a partnership of this nature?

What school colleagues would collaborate with you and what subjects do they teach?

What kind of support will you receive from your principal or administrative staff (e.g., the ok to go on two field trips with students)?

What sort of arts integration (if any) currently takes place at your school?

What sort of team or collaborative teaching (if any) currently takes place at your school?

At its core, this program is designed to help teachers carry out tailor-made, project-based learning experiences for their students that focus on making a difference or working through an issue. Describe the kind of project you and your colleagues would like to accomplish through this partnership. Rough ideas are just fine.

Why do you want to collaborate with the Wexner Center?

Another key element of this program is the cultivation of sustained student engagement during and after the school day. Would you and your colleagues allow Wexner Center education department staff to visit your school at some point during the school year to make students aware of programming available to them?

We want to meet the teachers who might be our year-long partners! If your school is considered for Art in Action, would you and your colleagues be open to meeting with Wexner Center staff to help us determine if our partnership would be a good fit?

Thank you for your interest in Art in Action!
